George O: Barnes.

The Indian Witness, published at Calcutta, bas this to say of Mr. Barnes in connection with the Lucknow Desahra meet-

A notable feeture of the recent gathering was the presence of the Ray, G. O. Barnes, the celebrated "Mountain Evangelist" of Kentucky. Mr. Barnes le a man of striking presence, of strong Individuality, of superior gifts as a speaker, and of reilgious viaws which are so completaly out of line with the mass of evangelical teachere that his presence is surn to be quickly recognized wherever he goes. His first littie telk was on straight Methodist lines, and delivered in Methodist phraseology. His second was a statement of his experience, in which he told of his conversion and eatirs esucification, but added a third blessing, the discovery of the gospel of faith-healing. At the next meeting, or rethar after the meeting, he unfolded some of his peculiar ylews in a hrlef talk to the uneaved, which startled his hearers not e little. It seemed very much like telling friands about him and said softly; them that thay were all right if they only knew It, but no doubt Mr. Barnes would direlaim ony such statement. At the next meeting some twenty or thirty persons rose to intimate that they were not about but that he was too weak for the unsatisfied with their experience. They soon dertaking. received some advice which was very unusual on such occasions, and the leader of the meeting was unkind enough to intimate that discordant doctrine would not be in order in the subsequent services. Mr. Barnee is a thorough Christian, and can exercise the gilt of allence without accepting any offense, and so during the rest of the meetings he made no effort to obtrude his peculiar views publicly on the people. He gave one of the addresses in the tent on Thursday evening, and not only spoke with power, but kept within the straightest lines

A Type Casting Machine. - Perhaps the most interesting things about the foundry are the liny casting machines that pour lowe;" said the founder, patting with his hand the odd little mass of machinery bafore which ha stood, "can throw out more type in one day than e man working ten hours a day can count in a month." The metal le kept thuid by a little furnace underneath the machinery and is projected into the mould by a pump. The mould is imovable and et avery revolution of the crank is brought to the spout, where it receives a fresh charge of the metal. A spring in front of the mould holds close to it a copper matrix, and the stamp of the letter on the metrix is directly opposite the aperture in the mould which meets the spout of the pump,-[I'hiladelphia Times,

The latest abbreviation crank halle from Illinois. He registered at a south side hotel thus: "Y & et." It was deciphered to Indicate "Wyauet." Out in Kansas they always write Leavenworth "11 worth." and Wyandotte "Y &." All this is done in tha interest of economy-not through indolence. There was a man onre whose name was James Hole, and who was so lazy that in registering his name he simply made . "J" and then punched hole in the paper. John Underwood of Andover, Mass, always eigned himsel':

A SULL OF WEATHER. - The old wooden school-house at Log Hollow was crowded by people who had come to take a part in the spelling-match. Finally it came to a blacksmith's turn to stand up. The word "weather" was given to him.

"Weet hour, weather," he sald.

And as he sai down, the oldest inhabitant, who was doring on one of the back benches started in time to remark it was the worst speil of weather he had ever known, with an experience that extended back some seventy odd years .- [Sam.

A remarkable leature of the golden wed ding of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Vansickle was the presence of six brothers and sisters of the aged groom who were at the orighnal wedding fifty years ago. Such an unbroked family record is rarely met with. -[Newton (N. J.) Register.

The waste of food in hotels and restanrante, says the Chicago Times, is something enormous. In London this waste is partially utilized by the Sisters of Mercy, who keep some one constantly in the kitchen to save the scraps as well as the articles that are returned from the dining rooms. These ere carefully aorted and put in covered baske's. The soups, chowlers and gravies are placed in cans or buckets. At night a covered wagon comes and takes them away, Some of the articles are taken to hospitals and asylums, the others are distributed among those of the sick and poor who are deserving.

How to keep Up Fires.

As winter is here and much fuel is wasted in the menner of replenishing coal fires, both in farnaces and gretes, it would be well to try the following, copied from an exchange: "They should be fed with a little coal at the time and often. But servants, to seve time and trouble, put on a great daal at once, the first result being thet elmost all the heat le absorbed by the newly put on coal, which can not give out heat until it becomes red hot. WE are under constant obligations to Hon. J. B. McCreery for many public documents, including the Congressional Record, the contents of which are at this time of extraordinary interest. We only wish we had at our disposal the time necessary to peruse these documents thoroughly, as they contain much justruction in reference to public effairs, which is needed by too many of us. The meagre telegraphic reports of the doings of Congress, furnished by the daily prese, though quite acceptible as well as interesting, fall far short of affording that information which is to be derived from the debates in Congress, as in the intter is contained about all that is known by our ablest etateemen concerning the subjects discussed. It is due to Mr. McCreary to eay in this connection that his courteey and kindness to us laby no means exceptional, se the official record aliuded to shows that he has been duly attentive to the interests of his consiltneats. As evidence of this fact we may mention that he has already precented and had referred to the proper committees upward of sixty patitions for the relief of as many citizens on account of wer claims and pension claims, The correspondence necessary hetween the claiments and the Contressman in regard to these matters and the preparation hy him of their respective claims for presentation, invoive the performance of a great deal of gratultons labor-much more then a lazy or careiess man ever would perform. One of our greatest misfortunes is that our average statesman are to great to do anything. Indeed so prevalent and fashlonable is this disability resulting from genlus, that a man who while occupying a high public position condescends to keep sober and endeavor to render some actual eer vice to the people who have houored him, is made the object for ridicule by not a few who ought to have more sense. We feel assured that the people of the 8th Congressional District need have no fears that their interests will suffer either from want of Industry, vigilance or ability on the part of their present representative.

In a resolution requiring such reports the auditor informs the Legislature that during the last firest year he paid out to pro tem. A BILL is before the Lagislature to make the carrying of concealed deadiv weapone a felony. The present law is severe enough if it were properly executed. A better trains was asieep. plen would be to take away the alleged right of the courts and Commonwealth's Attorneys to suspend judgment in such cases, which virtually annuls the law. We know of numerous cases of compromise and conviction in which the imprisonment part of the penalty was never inflicted. In fact wa can recall no case of a man with money to pay his fine and lawyers ever having to stay the 10 days in jail. Let the law stay as it is and hold Commonwealth's Attorheye to a closer responsibility.

WE have been holding our breath the better to hear the Hon. Fontains Fox Bobbitt's promised resolution to dispense with ice water during the asseion, but so far the giadeome action has not been voucheafed. Can it he that Mr. Bobbitt is going back on a promise that was the burden of his speeches for yesn? Perish the though! But it seems that he has lost his golden opportunity when he failed to present his mighty effort at retrenchment and reform during this unheard of cold spell.

BLESSINGS often come to us in disguise and Poik Johnson's recent defeat is now recognized by him in that light, for he says in the C. J. It was just the hit required. 62 years of "sessoning" in this climate must have pretty effectually ex of wood.

How intense the interest in going over the remparts of the oid fort, with au juteliigent guide, to atand upon the very apot where indomitable valor held the scantily menned bastions against overwhelming odds. There were but 30 capable of bearing arms, when the Sepaya broke into open mutiay, and all who could took refuge in

Only 3 of the 8 bastions could be held at ail by the little handful. The brove chapiain took his piace with the rest and fought galiantly. One woman, the wife of a Sergeant, who had been killied, took his accurate aim among the besiegers.

The woman and children were quite shaltered during the siege in the large bungalow, where avery night we sit down at the Major's hospitable table, to dinter, after the evening services. For nine days, harreseed by day and night, the intrepid gar rison fought, repelling repeated and desperate assault; and at isst, seeing further resistance hopeiese, took to their hoats on the 10th night and dropped down the Gangee Ala.! the treacherous river seemed in league with the blood thirsty human tigers, who organized a swift purenit. The fugitives, stranded on sandbanks, were overtaken in turn and all perished or were captured, to die at a later date-rave two only. It deepens the eadness of their fate to know that their heroic courage availed nething as did the equally persustent valor of the Lucknow garrison. Last Friday evening the Major and I walked round the rampart and he went over what little was known of the thrilling events of that 9 days siege, as told by the two survivers. At one spot the mutiners had sprung a mine, which isid a portion of the "curtain" in ruin; butaltho' massed for an assault -were deterred from an attempt to enter the breach by the brave Chaplain Fisher, standing slone in it and firing rapidly, supported by a few enfillading rillie in the contiguous bactions right and left. Their second mine, howover was right under the principle bastion, which could not be counterwined for inck of hands to do the work-all being fully employed in mounting gnard-and so the desperate garrison were obliged to take to their boats under cover of night and the down the Ganger. Major Mackerzie told me that when be was recovering, with thatch, his bungelow, a few years ago, hur ied in the oid strew roof, he found, beside: numberiess musket bais -one 9 pound solid shot, and several baga of resin that had been fired into the thetch with the hope of burning them out. But the fires had gone out and they did no demage.

St. Andrew's, is a white cross on a deep, bine ground; but the position is not that of Caivary. It is the cross of "Our Father Jacob's" arms as he bleered Ephraim the younger, over Manasseh the Elder, by the unexpected manouvre that awakened Joseph's displeasure (tlen. 58 13-20). Ma, Empoa:—"An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure," and a pound of cure to better than a ship load of ergument in your columns. I saw some time ago an advertisement of a medicine called Bradfield's Fernaie Regulator and the wonderfut results from the use; and as my wife had been a sufferer and an invalid for Fiv-TREN YEARS from prolapsus and congestion of the womb and painful menstration and the doctors could do her no good, I was persuaded to try the remedy. So I sent for two bottles, and the result was she improved so much that I went for another package and she is now abia to do her household work and goes about wherever she pissees. I am confident she is permanently cured. I sent for a lot of this wonderful Female Regulator to selt, and every bottle that I have disposed of has given complete satisfaction, and the results are in every case all that could be desired.

With thanks to the Emterprise, which called my attention to it and to the Bradfield Regulator Co., the proprietors of this great boon, I am gratefully yours.

"I will tell you of the case of which I spoke, provided you will hold your tongue about it," said the doctor, drawing his visiting book from his pocket, and settling himself with the air of a professional storyteller. "The lady who was the patient in the case is still alive and one of the lovellest women in the city. It would never do for an indiscretion of mine to be the means of collectening her as to the facts which. of enlightening her as to the facts which, up to this time, we have carefully kept

The speaker was one of a party of four gentlemen gathered about a lavishly spread table in a private room of the Vier Jahresseiten, Munich. Tail, broad-shouldered and with one of those hugh beads so characteristics. teristically German in type, Cornelius Schorn, surgeon-in-chief of the royal obstet-rical clinic, would have been a noticeable figure in any assemblage.

Superbly furnished, brilliant' with light, and fragrant with the delicate aroma of Bordeaux and Bergundy, the room was s picture of cheerful and convivial comfort. Outside the drawn curtains a will night was closing around the city; the keen and cut-ting wind, driving straight from the Bavarian Alpa swept through the narrow streets with the fury of an enraged llon. All the afternoon the storm had been howling and shricking. At the corners of the square, where the blasts were strongest, hats and caps were whirled from the heads of the people as they struggled up the steep incline, and, dancing merrily to the grim melody of the gale, escaped from sight.

Heedless of the increasing uproar out of doors the gentlemen so pleasantly engaged with the delicacies before them eagerly assented to the doctor's wish for silence,

Gathering more closely about the table they awaited patiently the disclosure, cer-tain to be an interesting one unless Schorn's reputation as a raconteur was greatly over-

"Three years ago," he began, "worn out by the year's work, a brief let-up was abso-iutely necessary if I wished to avoid changing places with my patients. After com-pleting preparations to join a party of friends on a hunting expedition into the Austrian Tyrol, I was sitting in the office on the morning of the 19th of August, wait-ing simply until it was time to take the train. Always the servant of the people, a doctor never knows that anticipated vacations can be realised until actually under way; therefore, I was not at all surprised when the tell pealed furlously and a messenger entered with a summous to the bedside of an old friend at Berg, dying of consumption. Hastily telegraphing the party to go on without me, I jumped into the carriage, and in an honr's time stepped from the train at Berg.

"It was very late in the evening before I returned to Munich, the clocks in the neighborhood striking 12 as the schnell-zug pulled into the depot. The night, a fearfully close and sultry one, promised to end later on in one of those aummer tempests, brief in duration, but frequently of a terribly destructive character. The stench brought out by the heaviness of the atmosphere from the gutters and filthy thoroughfares of that part of the city known as the old town was overpowering. Far advanced in the arts and sciences, Munich is a city which has yet much to learn of sanitary principles. The ride before me dent or carelessness.'
was a long one. Throwing myself back "Gott in Himmeli No, Herr Doctor, that upou the drosky's seat, I closed my would be impossible; nothing could to: eyes, and before I knew it had dropped into a doza. I slept perhaps twenty minutes or more with that heavy, dreamless slumber always the result of fetigue and unusual emotion. I doubt whether I should have awakened at ell had not the abrupt bouncing and ewaying of the carriage, checked suddenly, raised me to consciousness. In the obscurity of the night I distinguished the figure of a man, gesticulating violently for us to stop, and avidently in a state of intense excitement. Without waiting for me to question him he gasped out the intelligence between his labored breaths that something was was wrong at the Sandling-erther's 'dead-house' (the new Gottraker recently finished in the outskirts of the

"For God's sake, Herr Doctor, eried the man, as he saw us driving off, 'go as if the devil was after you.'

"The pace at which we traveled the Maximilianstrasse would assuredly have distanced any devil of my acquaintance," added the doctor, with a smile. "Sparks of live fairly rained from the iron heels of the flying borses, and the thundering of the houfs on the hollow planking of the bridge sounded in the silence of the night like the tread of an army under a quick movement. With the lights of Munich once behind us, it was not long, with a clear highway, before we were standing at the Sendlingerther's gateway, rising the grimmest of sentinels in front of this citadel heli by death. The scene upon which I entered, piloted by the guard watching for my arrival, beggard description. The hall before the deadhouse doors was literally packed with comotery attendant, white as ashes with terror, and all talking at once. I gathered from their conflicting statements that a devil of a discrabadied soul was loose in the building and ringing the alarm. It is bound to bo so, Herr Doctor,' persisted the attendant on night duty at the time; it is bound to be so, for No. 53 is as dead as over she was; I saw her myself; but the signal is down, and we all heard the bell You might as well reason with the waves of the sea as to attempt to dissipate the inborn superstition of the lower German classes, Idli uot even attempt to disturb it. If they choose to believe that 'souls walked' and 'fluttered airily back and forth between the gloomy walls of this their iemporary prison, no words of mine could have elfoct.

"Finding me determined to face the worst, whatever it might be, the door was reluctantly opened and I was admitted. The buge and dismal apartment was but dunly lighted by scattered gas jet:
Blown by the littul breezest coming through the open windows, the flickering light from the burners wavered shifting light and shadow nerose the pinched and livid features, lending an appearance of motion to the drawn lips and sightless eyes. To one maccustomed to the aspect of the dead, the heavy list seem really to stir, to struggle against the lethargy laid upon them by the grimmest foe of mankind. I have never known the time when these rooms, erected for the lying in state of the dead before burial, were not crowled to the doors. At this time, perhaps, as many as fifty bodiesmed, women and children-wers resting upon trestles. In the urgent hurry of our errand it was impossible, so closely did the tresties sland, to pass between them without striking against the bodies themselves. The cuskuts standing at the head of all of them, waiting their consignment of glastly freight, did much to add to the bideousness of the scene, Strong as I am, and accustomed in the daily round of medical work to sights of harrer, I found myself now

overcomis. "At last, in the farthest corner of the room, where the shadows clustered thickest, the attendant stopped beside a treatle which supported the lender flaure of a w man re- | d e Tuesday

clining in a half-sitting position upon a couch of natural flowers, in a life-like atticouch of natural flowers, in a life-like atti-tude—a fancy of the professional entre-preneur. Clasped in the embrace of the aignaling instrument, sha seemed to have thrown herself down in the abendon of fa-tigue and thus to have fallen asleep. Many a pallid face has rested quietly in these gruesome surroundings, deaf to the whisp-ered words of love and agony spoken above it; but the hall had never roofed a figure more beautiful-frail and emaclated as it was-then the one before ms. The delicate form lay there as peacefully and quietly as if at any moment it might ise and tear itself free from the billows of satin and tear itself free from the billows of satin and lace heaped like anow about it. It seemed impossible that the signal could have sounded from this still and silent frame lying upon its strange couch, lifeless, frozen, a lovely wexen image, buried beneath exquisite flowers, but without a sign of life exquisite nowers, but without a sign of lite to account for the turned signal. It gave some coloring to the curious belief in the intervention of the devil expressed by the frightened attendants. As a physician whose work keeps him always in contact with the grim realities of grief and pain, not to speak of things which must be classed with the distinctly inexplicable, I readily understood the terror with which the superstitions German nature regarded this night alarm—an alarm made doubly hideous by the knowledge that it came from a tenement once—and apparently still—deserted

"Personally I do not believe in the establishment of these rooms in Gottsakers," con-tinued the doctor. "The revival of life oc-cure too seldom to justify the offense against delicacy of feeling brought about by this exposing of the dead and exhibition of private griefs. To realize the full repulsivemess of the practice, fancy a dearly-loved member of your own family resting in these haunts of sorrow, guarded by a hireling whose tenderness and care are measured by the length of your purse and their own unreasoning terrors.

"Without crediting the existing of any thing uncanny in the matter (I believe that there is a cause for everything), I had be-gun to be considerably puzzied myself. Lifting the shrunken wrist I sought for a trace of pulsation—the faintest would have given me a hope—but cold and white as marble the delicate hand lay in mine, a spray of rosse falling from the nerveless spray of roses falling from the nerveless fingers. A subtla something—half dread, half recognition—made me stoop more closely above the body. I felt that I knew it, and shrank from the shock of actus? recognition. Fushing aside the tresses of hair falling over the brow and coucealing the features, I could not control a cry of setonishment. actonishment when in the rigid form before me I saw tha young Baronin Friesbach, a girl when I had last seen her or rather a newly made matron in all the rosy happiness of the first months of married The shock was the greater from the fact that I had heard nothing of her illness, or of her, as she had gone at once to the Friesbach estate, in the environs of Heldelberg. I redoubled my efforts; I sought in every possible way to discover a sign of remaining or reviving life. It was in valu. To all appearances stone dead, she slept peacefully on, with all the strange and unaccountable weight about the body which comes when death has frosen the viens with au icy chili. The moments passed rapidly by, but without apparent change in the condition of thing«.

"'Hansel,' I said, sternly, turning to the man who was standing at my side, his tooth still chattering from his paroxysm of fright, 'you have certainly made some mistake. The signal must have been turned by acci-the instrument; see for yourself,' pointing to the one attached to the body, which, if you have entered these rooms at Gottsaker's, you know to be precisely similar to those in use in the regular French morgues.

"The words had scarcely left his lips be-fore, with a scream of wildest terror, Hansel dropped upon his knees, shuddering, haif-crazed, and with one shaking finger directing my attention to the apparatus above us. inoking up I saw that the arm of the instrument was moving slowly, tremulously, but unquestionably moving I watched it with almost the same amount of woudermant that Hansel axhibited, while it rose, trembled, and fell upon the gong, with a stroke hardly strongar than the blow of an infant, but, so delicately are these signaling instruments arranged, instantly followed by the warning rattle. It was but the work of an instant to follow attached the Instrument to the body. I Penny & Mc Alister. found that after leaving the battery this wire passed down and around the neck of the corpus, pressing closely like a tight necklace upon the carotid artery, naturally the first place, from lts connection with the heart, where reviving life currents would be perceptible. The mystery was no longer a mystery. The warning signal had undoubtedly been sounded by the throbbing artery. Coming at long and irregular intervals the pulsation either failed to occur while I was engaged in my efforts at resuscitation, or through come disarrangement of the body itself, caused by those efforts, had failed to be announced. "The Baronin Friesbach livel; the throbbing artery proved lt. Muscular contraction, as any physician will tell you. Is entirely possible in the dead. Arterial in evements are totally different in character and are susceptible of but one explanation-that life is not dond, but cleeping. "As this is a record of plain facts, with no necessity for a dramatic cilmax, as in fiction, formulated theories as to the cause of such attacks would be usele s. Whatever had been the cause, the result was a semblance of death that would deceive the closest accrutiny. I am not the only physi-clan who has been driven into a labyrinth of Indecision by each experiences. Indeed, we are not in such cases justified in using anything in the shape of remedial agents, except such drugs as act as prompters to torpld organs, the sort of position occupied by the man under the baizs at the opera.

"After dispatching a messenger for a case of surgical instruments and a powerful gelvanic battery I had the Baronin Fries-bach lifted from her resting place among these grim companions, and, warmly wrapped in blankets, placed in the carriage. She was still unconscious, but was evidently returning in a state which, if not exactly life, bordering too closely upon it to risk the shock which the sight of her surroundlngs would inevitably produce. liaving also instructed the messenger who had goue for my instruments to warn the family of my arrival with my sad burden, there was nothing to detain us. As we passed into the dewy freshmess of the early morning the rising sun was just beginning to throw long and slamler figures of light through the widely-opened windows.

"Catalopsy," continued the doctor, after a thoughtful pause, "is one of an endiess series of nervous discrilers which science has never fully conquered or comprehended. It unquestionably exists, but not, as old women's intes would have us believe, invariably accompanied by the helish torture of whole or even semi-unconsclousness. In the Barouth's case, whatever the cause of the suspension of life's forest, she was the same at dead, and, most fortunately, had been ignorant of everything going on about her rable from violent fever had set in. "She complained to me afterward of having suffered under a painful sensation of weight and of a stinging or pricking in the spinal marrow—as nearly as I could gather from her confused elatements the kind of feeling which accompanies the rousing of a limb which has been, as laymen term it,

"Of the funeral ceremonies, the grisf and sgony of her family, the long line of coro-neted carriages blocking the broad streets filled with sorrowing friends, following her to her eternal rest, she knew absolutely nothing. Not being the Friesbachs' family attendant at that time it was necessary, in order to avoid arousing her suspicious, to masquerade in the character of the consulting physician. A judicious outlay of golden thalers secured tha slience of the Gottaaker's officials, from whom the most danger was to be feared, and to this hour she is ignorant of the three days spent in the dreadful depths of the Gottsaker's 'dead' house.

"None of us," continued Schorn, after a moment's silence, "ever professed to believe in a special Providence, but after this it would be difficult for me to doubt that this at least is a page in the life of one man or woman upon which a supreme care has set its seal. It was never blind chance that kept me, for the first time in twenty years, from taking a badly needed rest, or a combination of circumstances only, which threw me-granting that the services of any other physician would have done as well-directly in the way of Gottsaker's messenger at a most unusual hour, or kept me at my post of mercy when the last hope and resource known to science had seemingly failed."

Poole, the Noted London Tallor.

[Philadelphia Press.] The craze for English clothes brings up stories of Poole, the noted tailor of London. who cut clothes for all the crowned heads of Europe. At a New York club recently a gentlemen told how he once outwitted the great tailor. "Money brings a man no consideration at Poole's," said he. "You must take a letter of introduction before they will deign to look at you. They don't expact your money under three years. If you pay in one year you get a big discount. If you pay in two years you get a smaller discount. No matter where you may go, once on their books, you can order clothing sent to you at any point on the globe. But you must first be introduced.

"It was my first year in London that I remarked to a friend that I guessed I would go to Poole's and order some clothes. The idea never entered my head that I couldn't drop in as I would to a tallor's at home aud get anything he has for cold cash. My friend told me the situation. I made him a bet that I would get an overcoat from Poole, for which he was to pay if I managed it without a letter. I went in, and a portly man presented himself and asked what could be done for me. I told him I wanted some clothing, and then began to feel about my pockets. 'Ah,' I exclaimed, 'I find I must go back to my hotel for the latter that Lord Tomnoddy gave me.' 'Don't mention it,' said he; it's quite satisfactory, I assure you.' So I ordered what I wanted and went out and reported to my friend, who had awaited developments in a cab, expecting to be called in to youch for me. All he sail was, 'You've won your bet; but I would like to know what particular lie you told, for, of course, you lied to him some-how.' I'cole himself died several years ego. In time. Kidney diseases may be prevented by purifying, renewing, and invigorating the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. When, through debility, the action of the kidneys is perverted, these organs rob the blood of its needed constituent, albumen, which is passed off in the urine, while worn out matter, which they should carry off from the blood, is allowed to remain. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the kidneys ere restored to proper action, and Albuminuria, or
